In this chapter, you will learn how industrialization affected American society in the late nineteenth century. You will learn how people migrated from the countryside to cities, and people from other countries came to the United States. You will also learn how technological change made it possible to transform the physical geography of the Great Plains. Finally, you will explore how Native American Indians were forced onto reservations, the buffalo were killed, and new settlers built ranches and farms.

— IMPORTANT IDEAS —

- A. In the 19th century, Americans moved from the countryside to cities as the nation became more urbanized. The use of farm machinery meant fewer workers were needed on farms, while demand for labor in factories and cities expanded.
- B. Urbanization brought many problems. Cities often lacked adequate public services for their growing populations. Streets were noisy, dirty, and congested. Many newcomers lived in crowded tenement housing.
- C. Political “bosses” ran “political machines.” They provided basic services for immigrants and the poor, in exchange for their votes; they used their control of city government to make personal fortunes on overpriced city contracts.
- D. Immigration escalated in the late nineteenth century. A variety of “push” and “pull” factors brought more immigrants to the United States seeking a better life.
- E. The “New Immigrants” came from Southern and Eastern Europe — Russia, Italy, Poland, and Greece. Most were Catholic or Jewish, spoke no English and were often poor. They tended to settle in large Eastern cities. They lived in ethnic communities in ghettos, where they could speak their native language.
- F. The children of the immigrants were often “Americanized” in the public schools.
- G. Nativists opposed immigration. The Chinese Exclusion Act was the first federal law restricting immigration. It prohibited Chinese immigration for 10 years.
- H. The frontier was the line between areas of settlement and those areas dominated by nature and Native American Indians. The last frontier consisted of the Great Plains and mountains, deserts, and basins of the Far West. The completion of the Transcontinental Railroad and the defeat of the Indians during the Indian Wars closed the final frontier and opened the region to settlement.
- I. Miners were attracted to the Far West by discoveries of precious metals such as during the California Gold Rush of 1849 and the Klondike Gold Rush of 1896.
- J. Ranchers came to drive their cattle herds across the open range to rail lines. Farmers occupied land under the Homestead Act and built homes and farms. To overcome the lack of rain and trees, they built homes of sod, dug water wells, and used steel plows and barbed wire.
- K. Government policy drove the Indians onto government reservations in the West.
- L. The Dawes Act, although intended to help Indians, had the opposite effect. It gave tribal lands to individual Indians, who often sold them. The American Indian Citizenship Act (1924) made all Indians into U.S. citizens.

ESSENTIAL QUESTIONS

- What economic, social, and political changes did urbanization bring to American cities?
- What were the experiences of immigrants in the late nineteenth century?
- What factors contributed to the settlement of the Great Plains and Far West?

URBANIZATION

In the last chapter, you learned how American industrialization increased its pace in the decades following the Civil War. Accelerating industrialization contributed to the process of urbanization — the movement of people from the countryside to towns and cities.

URBANIZATION: THE GROWTH OF CITIES

Demography is the study of population. One of the topics that demographers study is where people live. An important result of industrialization was the rapid expansion of American cities. In 1865, only two U.S. cities actually had populations of more than 500,000 — New York and Philadelphia.

By 1900, that number had risen to six. Three of them — New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia — reached populations of more than one million inhabitants. By this time, 40 percent of Americans lived in cities, and the proportion was growing.

Several factors contributed to the rapid urban growth. The introduction of new farm machinery, such as Cyrus McCormick's reaper, which cut and bundled grain, greatly reduced the number of farm jobs. Farmers and rural laborers sought work in towns and cities. At the same time, the rise of industry had created many new job opportunities. Workers were needed in factories, mines and workshops, and for services like transport. Americans were also attracted to cities by their cultural opportunities, popular entertainments, and rich variety. Finally, the explosion in urban growth was further fueled by unprecedented levels of immigration.

New farm machinery meant fewer workers were needed on farms to raise crops.

ACTING AS AN AMATEUR HISTORIAN

Select one major American city and use the Internet or your school library to investigate how its size changed between 1865 and 1900.

- Make a graph showing its population over several decades (1870, 1880, etc.).
- Find out what kind of work most people did in that city. For example, did the city have any special resources or industries that employed residents?
- Find out where most of the people living in that city came from. Were many residents from a particular part of the United States, or from a foreign country?
- What activities did people pursue in that city for relaxation and amusement?

CITIES FACE NEW PROBLEMS

Urbanization led to physical changes in the landscape. Trees and fields were replaced by wood and brick buildings and by paved roads. American cities mushroomed so quickly that municipal (city) authorities were often unable to deal adequately with all of their problems.

OVERCROWDING AND CONGESTION

Cities grew haphazardly. Streets were often not wide enough to bear the increased traffic. Horse-drawn cars crowded the streets, making movement almost impossible. Factories and trains polluted the air, while sewage sometimes contaminated drinking water and spread disease. Cities lacked the ability to deliver essential services — like clean water, garbage collection, and public schools — to so many residents. As cities grew, whole families crowded into tenements — single-room apartments often without heat or lighting. Frequently many families shared a single toilet.

Inadequate Public Services. Cities lacked the ability to deliver increased public services — hospitals, police forces, schools, fire departments, street cleaning, and garbage collection.

Transportation. Horse-drawn coaches and later electric trolleys were needed to transport workers to their jobs. To eliminate the pollution created by coaches and trolleys, New York City built a subway in 1900. By 1930, New York City had the world's largest subway system.

THE PROBLEMS CREATED BY GROWING CITIES

Overcrowding. Families were crowded into tenements (small apartment buildings). These tenements often lacked daylight, heat, fresh air, and adequate plumbing.

Social Tensions. In cities, rich people lived next door to the poor. Seeing the luxuries of the wealthy distressed poor people and increased social tensions and crimes.

A LOWER EAST SIDE TENEMENT

97 Orchard Street in the Lower East Side of New York City was a typical tenement building. Lukas Glockner, a German immigrant, built it in 1863. He hoped to make a profit by making cheap housing available to immigrant families arriving in New York City. The small building housed 22 families. At first, the building lacked running water, indoor toilets, or gas for light and heating. Like most tenements in New York City before central heating, it was freezing cold in winter and very hot in the summer. However, in 1867, New York City began passing laws requiring landlords to provide running water, inside toilets, and gas lines. Gradually, Glockner made the improvements to his building, adding windows for air and light. People lived there until 1935, when it was abandoned. Today it houses New York City's Lower East Side Tenement Museum.

POLITICAL MACHINES

City governments were often run by corrupt “political machines.” The leaders of these machines were known as political “bosses.” Either the boss or a small group told the workers and supporters of the machine what to do. The machines often provided jobs and other services to immigrants and the poor in exchange for their votes. The power of the political boss depended upon his ability to dominate voting and to control the agencies of municipal government. The machines also often had the support of other local business leaders.

By controlling elected officials in local government, political bosses were able to hand out government “patronage” jobs to reward loyal workers. The bosses then used their control of “city hall” to make illegal profits on city contracts or by collecting bribes. For example, Boss Tweed of Tammany Hall in New York City controlled thousands of city workers and influenced the operation of schools, hospitals, and other city-run services. Tweed benefited from the support of Irish immigrants. He controlled or bribed lawmakers to pass laws favorable to his interests. Tweed often overpaid himself on construction projects and land sales, stealing millions from the city.

Cartoon mocking political “bosses.”

While the political machines were corrupt, they did play a useful role. They helped immigrants settle into their new homeland, find housing, and obtain jobs. They also helped immigrants become naturalized citizens and even provided money to help them through hard times. The political machines were often the ones to get a street paved, extend a water pipe, or approve construction. But these services came at a very high price.

IMMIGRATION

In the late nineteenth century, European immigrants flooded American cities in search of work and places to live. In many of the largest American cities, European immigrants even came to outnumber native-born Americans.

WHY IMMIGRANTS CAME

Immigrants have always come to the United States for a variety of reasons. Historians often divide these into “push” and “pull” factors. A desire to escape oppression, poverty, religious discrimination or ethnic persecution “pushed” immigrants out of their homelands. A belief that America offered freedom and economic opportunity as well as ties to relatives already living here generally “pulled” immigrants to these shores. They saw the United States as a land of unbounded opportunities. Immigrants who fled oppressive regimes in Europe yearned to live in a democratic society like the United States.

SHIFTING PATTERNS OF IMMIGRATION

Before 1880, most immigrants to America came from parts of Northern Europe, especially Great Britain, Ireland, and Germany. In general, these immigrants were Protestants, except for large numbers of Irish Catholics. Most of these early immigrants spoke English.

THE “NEW IMMIGRANTS,” 1880–1920

Patterns of immigration changed in the 1880s. The construction of railroads across Europe and the appearance of large ocean-going steamships made the voyage to America more accessible to many Europeans. Most of these “New Immigrants” came from Southern and Eastern Europe, especially Poland, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Greece, and Russia. They were often Catholic, Jewish, or Orthodox Christian rather than Protestant, and spoke no English.

THE IMMIGRANT EXPERIENCE

Immigrants in the late nineteenth century usually faced great hardships, beginning with their passage to America. They traveled in steerage, in an open room below the water line, often with their life's belongings in a single bag. On a clear day, they assembled on the ship's deck for sunshine and fresh air. Most first arrived in New York City, where they were processed at the vast government center on Ellis Island in New York Harbor. Those with tuberculosis or other diseases were sent back.

Initial Hardships. The “New Immigrants” either stayed in New York City or took trains to join their relatives in other parts of the country. Most settled in cities. They were usually poor, dressed differently from other Americans and were unfamiliar with American customs. They moved into crowded, tenement buildings and worked at unskilled jobs for long hours at low pay. They often faced hostility and discrimination from native-born Americans and even from other, different immigrant groups. Despite these hardships, there was often a strong spirit of optimism among many immigrants. Many had already survived far worse conditions in the countries where they came from. If America was not everything they had hoped for, they appreciated that there were new opportunities for both themselves and their children.

Ethnic Ghettos. To cope with their problems, immigrants usually settled with relatives and others of the same nationality in ethnic neighborhoods known as ghettos. The immigrants felt more comfortable around those who spoke the same language and who followed the same customs as themselves.

European immigrants on deck as they make the voyage to America.

In their own communities, immigrants could speak their native language, attend their own churches and synagogues, and be among relatives and friends from the “Old Country.” Some of these communities even published newspapers in their own native language. However, living in these ethnic ghettos also isolated immigrants from mainstream American life, making it harder for them to adopt new customs.

THE PROCESS OF AMERICANIZATION

While some adult immigrants attended night school to learn English, most were too busy working and caring for their families to spend time learning a new language or culture. It was left to their children to learn English and become “Americanized” — learning to dress, speak, and act like other Americans.

These immigrant children eventually became “assimilated” — similar to other Americans. America was seen as a “melting pot” in which immigrants were “melted” down and reshaped. America’s public schools greatly assisted in this process. Often Americanization was accompanied by conflict. For example, immigrant parents might desire an arranged marriage for their children, while their children insisted on finding their own marriage partners according to the American custom.

Immigrant children learn to speak English in a New York City public school.

ACTING AS AN AMATEUR HISTORIAN

The following passage is from a letter that former President Theodore Roosevelt wrote to the President of the American Defense Society in January 1919:

“We should insist that if the immigrant who comes here in good faith becomes an American and assimilates himself to us, he shall be treated on an exact equality with everyone else. It is an outrage to discriminate against any such man because of creed, or birthplace, or origin .... There can be no divided allegiance here. Any man who says he is an American, but something else also, isn’t an American. We have room for but one language, and that is the English language, and we have room for but one loyalty and that is loyalty to the American people. We can have no ‘50-50’ allegiance in this country. Either a man is an American and nothing else, or he is not an American at all.”

- ★ What were Roosevelt’s views on Americanization?
- ★ Roosevelt once told a newspaper that “English should be the only language taught in public schools.” What are your views on this today? Explain your answer.

THE RISE OF NATIVISM

As the flood of immigrants grew, hostility to immigration also mounted. Nativists, or those “born” or “native” to the United States, wanted to restrict immigration. Nativists believed that people of other races, religions, and nationalities were inferior and that the “New Immigrants” were especially inferior to white, Anglo-Saxon, Protestant Americans. Nativists feared the “New Immigrants” could never be fully absorbed into American society since they lived in ghettos and spoke their own languages. Finally, Nativists argued that immigrants working for low wages would take away jobs from other Americans.

EARLY RESTRICTIONS ON IMMIGRATION

For most of the nineteenth century, there were no limits at all on immigration to the United States. Anyone who was healthy and could afford to come here was permitted to immigrate.

The Chinese Exclusion Act (1882) was the first federal law to restrict immigration to the United States. It reflected American prejudices at the time against Asians. In California, political leaders blamed unemployment and a general decline in wages on the presence of Chinese workers. The law temporarily banned the immigration of Chinese workers and placed new requirements on Chinese residents already living in the United States. These residents had to obtain a special certificate before leaving the United States if they planned to re-enter. State and federal courts were denied the ability to grant citizenship to Chinese residents. American leaders carefully negotiated with the Chinese government in order to enforce this ban.

ACTING AS AN AMATEUR HISTORIAN

The Chinese Exclusion Act provided a 10-year ban on the immigration of Chinese workers. Here are some of its key provisions:

“Preamble. Whereas, in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to this country endangers the good order of certain localities within the territory:

- §1. [T]he coming of Chinese laborers to the United States is suspended; and during such suspension it shall be unlawful for any Chinese laborer to come, or, having so come after the expiration of said ninety days, to remain within the United States.
- §9. Before any Chinese passengers are landed from a vessel arriving in the United States, the collector shall examine such passengers, comparing the certificates with the list of passengers; no passenger shall be allowed to land from such a vessel.
- §10. That every vessel whose master shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this act shall be liable to seizure and condemnation in any district of the United States into which such vessel may enter.”

What was the aim of this law? Why do you think some Americans supported this law?

In U.S. v. Wong Kim Ark (1898), the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the children of Chinese immigrants born in the United States could not be denied citizenship. This part of the Chinese Exclusion Act, the Court held, violated the 14th Amendment.

APPLYING WHAT YOU HAVE LEARNED

Imagine you are a member of Congress in 1882. Write a speech giving arguments for or against the proposed Chinese Exclusion Act. Your speech should try to persuade other members of Congress to vote as you suggest.

LEARNING WITH GRAPHIC ORGANIZERS

Complete the graphic organizer below by describing various aspects of urbanization and immigration in this period.

THE LAST AMERICAN FRONTIER

In the later nineteenth century, the last American frontier was transformed by America's rapid population growth and industrial development. The frontier has generally been defined as the line separating areas of settlement from "unsettled" wilderness territory. From another point of view, the American frontier marked the dividing line between areas where Native Americans lived and areas settled by more technologically advanced peoples.

THE SETTLEMENT OF THE FRONTIER

Since the arrival of the first colonists, the American frontier had shifted steadily westwards. By the end of the Civil War, American settlers occupied the Mid-western prairies and had a foothold along the Pacific Coast. Between these two lines was a vast expanse of territory. Much of this last frontier consisted of the Great Plains, home to millions of buffalo and Native American Indians who lived off their food and hides. There were also mountains, deserts, and basin areas.

THE LURE OF PRECIOUS METALS

Even before the Civil War, settlers had been drawn to the California "gold rush" of 1848–1849. In 1896, a Californian and two Indian friends found a gold nugget near Canada's Klondike River near Alaska. This set off one of the most turbulent gold rushes in history. Within months, 100,000 gold-seekers set out for the Yukon. The voyage was long, hard, and cold, and only 30,000 completed the trip, with most giving up along the way. Still other discoveries of gold and silver were made in Alaska, the Rocky Mountains and the Black Hills of North Dakota. Thousands of prospectors and adventurers moved to these areas in hopes of striking it rich. Rough-and-ready mining towns sprang up overnight; often they collapsed just as fast when the minerals ran out or larger mining companies took over.

Under the new act, Indians did not need to give up tribal lands or customs to become citizens, as they did under the Dawes Act. Some historians see the act as a reward for Native American enlistment as soldiers in World War I. Since Native American Indians had served the nation in wartime, they deserved to be given American citizenship. Ten years later, the Dawes Act was replaced by an act guaranteeing tribal self-government.

President Coolidge meets with Indian leaders.

ACTING AS AN AMATEUR HISTORIAN

Under the American Indian Citizenship Act of 1924, the government offered the following:

“[A]ll non citizen Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States be, and they are hereby, declared to be citizens of the United States: Provided that the granting of such citizenship shall not in any manner impair or otherwise affect the right of any Indian to tribal or other property.”

Imagine you are a member of a government commission in 1930. Compare the Dawes Act, American Indian Citizenship Act, and earlier policies towards Native Americans. Then decide, after balancing all of the interests involved, which policy was most effective. Which best represented Native American Indian rights? Present your conclusions in a brief report.

CHAPTER STUDY CARDS

Urbanization

- ★ Urbanization. Movement of people from the countryside to cities.
- ★ Urbanization brought many problems:
  - Crowded tenements: one-room apartments that lacked daylight, adequate plumbing.
  - Pollution, sewage contamination of water.
  - Inability to supply essential public services — hospitals, police, schools, and clean streets.
  - Political corruption: “Political machines” run by political “bosses” helped immigrants but stole from city governments through overpriced contracts.

Immigration

- ★ Why They Came:
  - “Push” Factors: oppression, poverty, wars, and ethnic persecution.
  - “Pull” Factors: belief in American freedom, economic opportunity, and cultural ties.
- ★ “New Immigrants:” Came from Southern and Eastern Europe, mostly Catholic and Jewish; often less educated; spoke no English.
- ★ Process of Americanization.
  - Americanization. Immigrants learned to speak, act, and behave like Americans; often left to immigrant children.

The Settlement of the Far West

- ★ Discovery of gold and silver.
  - Klondike Gold Rush. Gold found in Yukon, near Alaska in 1896; other discoveries.
- ★ Transcontinental Railroad (1869).
  - Made travel to West Coast easier.
- ★ Homestead Act (1862).
  - Made federal land was made available to settlers.
- ★ Ranchers.
  - Drove cattle on "long drives" across open range.
- ★ Farms.
  - Dug water wells, made sod houses, used barbed wire and steel plows.

Policy towards Native American Indians

- ★ Indian Wars. Federal troops defeated Sioux and other tribes on the Great Plains and Southwest, forcing them onto reservations.
- ★ Policy of government was to move Native Americans to reservations in the West.
- ★ Dawes Act (1887).
  - Sought to "Americanize" Native Americas.
  - Abolished Native American tribes, and allotted tribal lands to individuals, who sold them.
- ★ American Indian Citizenship Act (1924).
  - Granted U.S. citizenship to all Native Americans born in the United States.

CHECKING YOUR UNDERSTANDING

Directions: Put a circle around the letter that best answers the question.

Use the information in the table and your knowledge of social studies to answer the following question.

URBANIZATION, RAILROAD MILEAGE, AND INDUSTRIALIZATION

	1860	1870	1880	1890
Urban Population (millions)	6.2	9.9	14.1	22.1
Percent of U.S. Population in Cities	20%	25%	28%	35%
Cities Over 10,000 in Population	93	168	223	363
Railroad Mileage (thousands)	30.6	52.9	93.3	166.7

Source: Gary Fields, Communications, Innovations, and Networks

- 1 Based on the table, what was an important effect of industrialization in the United States in the later part of the nineteenth century?
- A People began to move from cities to rural areas.
  - B The urban population declined.
  - C The rate of expansion of railroad lines began to drop.
  - D The proportion of Americans living in cities continuously increased.

Geog 13(A)

EXAMINE the question. The table provides information about U.S. demography and railroad mileage. To answer the question, you need to look at each choice and see if it is accurate based on the table.

RECALL what you know. You should recall how to read a table. The table shows an increasing percentage of people living in cities every decade.

APPLY what you know. The best answer is Choice D. If you examine each of the other answer choices, you will see that, according to the table, they are not supported by information provided in the table.

Now try answering some additional questions on your own.

- 2 Nativists in California in the 1880s would most likely have supported the —
- F creation of settlement houses to aid new immigrants
  - G passage of the Chinese Exclusion Act
  - H continuation of the contract labor system
  - J assimilation of Native American Indians into mainstream culture
- 3 After 1880, where did the majority of “New Immigrants” to the United States come from?
- A Northern and Western Europe
  - B Canada and Latin America
  - C Southern and Eastern Europe
  - D China and Southeast Asia

- 4 During the late nineteenth century, where were the reservations located that North American Indian tribes were sent to?
- F along the major rivers of the Midwest Geog 13(A)
 G near large cities in the Northwest
 H in sparsely populated areas of the West
 J east of the Mississippi River

Use the information in the table and your knowledge of social studies to answer the following question.

POPULATION OF SELECT WESTERN CITIES, 1860–1890

Name of City	Population in 1860	Population in 1890
Denver, Colorado	2,603	106,713
Omaha, Nebraska	1,883	140,352
Portland, Oregon	2,874	46,385
San Francisco, California	56,802	298,997

Source: Population Abstract of the United States

- 5 What conclusion can be drawn from the table about the effect of the Transcontinental Railroad on these Western cities?
- A These cities became corrupt and crime-ridden. Econ 15(A)
 B The population of Western cities increased greatly.
 C Most Native American Indians relocated to these cities.
 D Railroads had little impact on these cities.
- 6 Which statement accurately describes the development of the Great Plains in the late nineteenth century?
- F Great profits were earned there in the steel industry. Geog 12(A)
 G Railroads decreased in importance.
 H Immigrants could not afford to farm these lands.
 J Technological innovations made farming there possible.
- 7 During the last part of the nineteenth century, most immigrants to the United States found work as —
- A unskilled factory and sweatshop workers Hist 3(C)
 C educated professionals
 B scientists and technicians
 D skilled craftsmen
- 8 In the late nineteenth century, the “bosses” of urban political machines often —
- F denied voting rights to the poor Hist 3(A)
 G accepted bribes in return for favors
 H wasted money on military spending
 J discriminated against migrant workers

Use the information in the bar graph and your knowledge of social studies to answer the following question.

- 9 Based on this poster, which is an accurate statement?
- A Immigrants were encouraged to learn to speak English.
  - B Granite City had laws prohibiting immigrants from moving there.
  - C The people in the poster were native-born Americans.
  - D Granite City encouraged diversity in its immigrant population.

Use the information in the passage and your knowledge of social studies to answer the following question.

“Today three-fourths of our people live in tenements, and the drift of the population to the cities is sending increasing multitudes to crowd them. The fifteen thousand tenant houses that were the despair of past generations have swelled into thirty-seven thousand, and more than twelve hundred thousand persons call them home. We know now that there is no way out; the ‘system’ that was the evil offspring of public neglect and private greed has come to stay forever in our civilization. Nothing is left but to make the best of a bad bargain ....”

— Jacob Riis, How the Other Half Lives, Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1890
